

Eating for Weight loss!

What to eat for weight loss?

Low fat?

Low Carb?

High Protein?

Weight Watchers?

Are you confused yet?

BOTTOM LINE? What that determines how much weight you can lose is the balance between total calories eaten versus total calories you burn (activity). Cutting back on carbohydrates can help but most cannot sustain a very low carbohydrate diet like Atkins plan for the long term.

Give that fun “new” plan everyone is talking about a try to get started.

But for long term success, focus on choosing a variety of quality, nutritious food that you enjoy.

Tracking what you eat helps control calories!

Research shows that when people track carefully what they eat weight loss is usually doubled! So, consider keeping some type of food journal or food diary.

Tracking means writing down everything that you put into your mouth. There is a paper form on the CHS LiveWELL website. For some people just writing it down is enough! But tracking “how much” in terms of servings, calories, grams of carbs or protein, or Weight watcher® points can really make sure the pounds drop off. There is a recommended servings table below, it is one approach.

There are now many good apps to track food and activity that are also very helpful. We recommend the Myfitnesspal app linked to a Fitbit activity tracker. Myfitnesspal even has menus and recipes.

Calorie Goals for Weight Loss:

These calorie goals are generally recommended for weight loss:

Women: 1200 – 1500 calories per day

Men: 1500 -2000 calories per day

Cutting calories too low for weight loss can result in more lean muscle tissue loss. Not a good thing! Aim for not more than 2 pounds per week or less than 1,200 calories per day (unless under medical supervision).

Menus by Calorie level!

Example menus for 1300, 1600 and 2000 calories can help. Find them on the LiveWELL website.
